TRIGGER

Stale public profiles

Core insight: they are not buying automation. They are buying relief from visible neglect.

WHO THEY ARE

An owner-operator or small team lead at a local service business: plumber, roofer, dentist, salon, med spa, gym, auto shop, restaurant, realtor, contractor, law firm, or cleaning company.

They are not trying to become a creator. They want customers to see a business that looks active, trustworthy, and open when they check before calling.

PSYCHOLOGICAL STATE

They feel low-grade guilt about social media. It matters, but it never feels more urgent than customers, quotes, appointments, staffing, admin, or family.

PAIN POINTS

- "We have not posted in months, and I know that looks bad."
- "I do not know what to say every week."
- "Tools still mean I have to write the posts."
- "Hiring someone sounds expensive and annoying to manage."
- "I need Facebook, Instagram, and Google to look current."
- "I do not want cheesy captions, trends, or fake marketing voice."

BUYING TRIGGER

They wake up embarrassed by a stale profile, a competitor posting more often, a customer saying they checked Facebook, or a slow month where every trust signal matters.

LANGUAGE THEY USE

OBJECTIONS

- "Will this sound generic or AI-written?"
- "Will it know my business well enough?"
- "Do I still have to approve everything?"
- "Will it post to Google Business Profile?"
- "Is $99/month worth it if I am not sure social media brings leads?"
- "How is this different from Canva, Buffer, Hootsuite, or ChatGPT?"

EXACT CHATGPT PROMPTS

"I own a plumbing business and hate social media. What is the minimum I need to post so customers know we are active?"

"What should a local dentist post on Facebook and Instagram every week?"

"Can AI manage social media for a small business or do I need to hire someone?"

"I have not posted on my business Facebook page in 4 months. How do I restart without it looking weird?"

"Make me a 30-day content calendar for a roofing company that does not sound cheesy."

"Compare Buffer, Hootsuite, Canva, and hiring a freelancer for my small business social media."
